

PRE-WRITING & POST-WRITING

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

At the end of the lesson, you should be able to:

- Apply advanced pre-writing techniques, including divergent thinking methods such as mind mapping, free-writing, and concept clustering.
- Analyse and refine the macro-structure of written work, ensuring logical flow, coherence between paragraphs, and a well-constructed argumentative structure.
- Demonstrate proficiency in the art of concise and precise expression, moving beyond basic proofreading to eliminate redundancies and refine terminology.

PRE-WRITING & POST-WRITING

Crafting impactful writing tasks necessitates the thoughtful creation of cohesive sets of activities encompassing pre-writing, during-writing, and post-writing stages. This involves ensuring a seamless and interconnected flow throughout the entire writing process.

PRE-WRITING

Pre-writing refers to the crucial phase of the writing process that precedes the actual composition. It involves a series of strategic activities aimed at generating and organizing ideas, establishing a purpose, and constructing a preliminary framework for the impending written work.

PRE-WRITING: BRAINSTORMING TECHNIQUES

Engage in divergent thinking through techniques such as mind mapping, free-writing, or concept clustering. For instance, when tasked with an essay on environmental sustainability, students can use mind maps to explore interconnected themes like renewable energy, conservation practices, and policy implications.

Another example:

Before starting an essay on climate change, a writer might brainstorm a list of related topics, such as the causes of climate change, its effects on the environment, and potential solutions.

PRE-WRITING: BRAINSTORMING TECHNIQUES

PRE-WRITING: FREEWRITING

A novelist may engage in freewriting to explore a character's backstory or motivations. This unstructured writing allows the writer to discover unexpected details and insights.

PRE-WRITING: RESEARCH

When preparing to write a research paper on renewable energy, a student might gather information on different types of renewable energy sources, their benefits, and challenges.

PRE-WRITING: MIND MAPPING

A student planning an argumentative essay on the pros and cons of social media might create a mind map with branches for positive and negative aspects, helping visualize connections between ideas.

PRE-WRITING: OUTLINING

Before writing a speech, a speaker might create an outline with key points, supporting evidence, and a logical flow of ideas to ensure a coherent and organized presentation.

PRE-WRITING: IDENTIFYING AUDIENCE AND PURPOSE

A business professional preparing a report may consider the target audience (executives, stakeholders) and the purpose (inform, persuade). This influences the tone, style, and content of the document.

PRE-WRITING: STORYBOARDING

A filmmaker might use storyboarding to plan the sequence of scenes in a movie. This visual representation helps in organising the narrative structure.

PRE-WRITING : DRAFTING QUESTIONS

Before conducting an interview for a magazine article, a journalist may pre-write by drafting a list of questions to ensure the interview covers relevant topics and gathers essential information.

PRE-WRITING: CLUSTERING

A poet might use clustering to generate ideas for a new poem by associating words or images related to a central theme, allowing for creative exploration.

PRE-WRITING: LISTING

A student preparing to write a compare and contrast essay on two historical figures might create a list of similarities and differences to guide the essay's structure

POST-WRITING

POST-WRITING

Post-writing encompasses the activities undertaken after the initial draft is completed. It involves a meticulous revision process, ensuring coherence, clarity, and adherence to academic conventions.

This is also the stage of the writing process that occurs after the initial draft has been completed. During this phase, writers focus on revising, editing, and refining their work to improve clarity, coherence, and overall effectiveness.

Post-writing activities are essential for producing a polished and final version of a written piece.

POST-WRITING: REVISION

After completing an essay on a historical event, a writer might revisit the introduction to ensure it effectively captures the reader's attention and accurately previews the content of the essay. The writer may also revise and reorganize paragraphs to enhance the overall flow and coherence of the argument.

POST-WRITING: EDITING FOR GRAMMAR AND STYLE

A journalist who has written a news article may engage in post-writing activities by carefully editing the text to eliminate grammatical errors, improve sentence structure, and ensure consistency in writing style. This step is crucial for maintaining professionalism and readability.

POST-WRITING: PEER REVIEW

A student working on a research paper may exchange drafts with a peer for feedback. The peer review process provides valuable insights into the clarity of ideas, the strength of arguments, and potential areas for improvement.

POST-WRITING: PROOFREADING

A novelist completing a manuscript may focus on proofreading to catch any typographical errors, misspellings, or punctuation mistakes that could distract readers from the narrative. This meticulous review ensures a polished and error-free final product.

POST-WRITING: SEEKING FEEDBACK FROM INSTRUCTORS OR EDITORS

An aspiring author may submit a manuscript to an editor for feedback. The editor can provide constructive criticism on plot development, character arcs, and overall storytelling, contributing to the refinement of the work.

POST-WRITING: CHECKING CITATIONS AND REFERENCES

An academic researcher finalizing a scientific paper may carefully review citations and references to ensure accuracy and proper formatting. This attention to detail is crucial for maintaining academic integrity.

POST-WRITING: POLISHING TRANSITIONS

A writer working on a persuasive essay may pay close attention to transitions between paragraphs and ideas. Polishing these transitions ensures a smooth and logical flow, enhancing the overall coherence of the argument.

POST-WRITING: FORMATTING AND PRESENTATION

A student completing a term paper may focus on formatting elements such as font size, margins, and spacing. Attention to these details contributes to the professionalism and visual appeal of the final document.

POST-WRITING: FINALISING CONCLUSIONS

A business professional wrapping up a report may revisit the conclusion to ensure it effectively summarizes key points and provides a clear and impactful closing statement.

POST-WRITING: PUBLISHING OR SUBMITTING

An author, after completing the post-writing process, may submit a manuscript to a literary agent or publishing house. Alternatively, a student may submit a final essay to an instructor. This step marks the end of the writing process and the transition to sharing the work with its intended audience.

SUMMARY

PRE-WRITING & POST-WRITING

Pre-writing is a diverse set of activities that help writers prepare for the writing task ahead. It involves exploration, organization, and planning to set the stage for effective and purposeful communication. By investing time in pre-writing, writers can enhance the clarity, coherence, and overall quality of their final written pieces.

Post-writing activities are crucial for refining and perfecting a written piece. This stage involves a critical examination of the initial draft, addressing issues related to content, style, grammar, and presentation to produce a polished and effective final product.

FURTHER READING

Mogahed, Mogahed. (2013, April). Planning out pre-writing activities.

Patthey, G. G., Matsumura, L. C., & Valdés, R. M. (2004, March). Investigating the process approach to writing instruction in urban middle schools.

Coleman, J. M. (2010, January). Elementary Teachers' Instructional Practices Involving Graphical Representations.

THANK YOU